FOUR EXPLORATIONS: Student Air Travel CO2e emission

Our project began by bridging our positionalities as international students and designers, adapting the playfulness and visual experimentation in our practices to make complex student travel data more accessible and legible. Initially, we explored a wide range of graphic communication methods, from board games and speculative play to UX/UI-style interfaces, as ways to translate quantitative data into approachable forms. Through this process, however, we realised that student travel is not a lifestyle choice but a structural condition of participating in international education.

The carbon emissions associated with this pass are underwritten by the university's global expansion strategy. By boarding, the passenger acknowledges that within the current structural conditions of global education, no viable alternative for physical mobility exists. Individual guilt is superseded by institutional dependency.

Authorised Movement Pack

Students are categorised into three movement bands: Domestic, Short-haul, and Long-haul. Each document represents a stage of processing. A block of barcodes tracks the progression, embedding a geological-sediment pattern so that every administrative step accumulates into a visible record of institutional movement and its emissions.

1

CAS LETTER

The confirmtion of a student's visa reframes physical mobility as a requirement for enrollment, not a personal choice.

2

TICKET

The ticket assigns the student to a mobility band and records the required distance and emission allocation

3

BAG DROP

The baggage tag explores the futility of individual effort within a rigid system

4

PASSPORT STAMPS

The Authorised Movement Passport tracks both personal and planetary movement.

5

CHECK-IN

The confirmtion of a visa, via CAS letter reframes physical mobility as a requirement for enrollment, not a personal choice.

6

ARRIVAL RECEIPT
